

Baffling discoveries that boggle your mind

This article may seem innocent. It is not. It is harsh, graphic and probably painful.

It may look innocent only if you just read the text without following the links in red and without paying attention to the pictures. This will take you a couple of minutes.

If you just randomly open a few links to try to get to the gist of it you may find yourself wondering: 'Do I really want to know this? (No) Do I really need to know this? (Yes) Should I invest my precious time in this?' (You should but it is up to you) This will probably take a couple of hours.

But the real mindboggling starts when you ingest most or all of it because you are getting curious and probably worried at the same time. You may then find what is behind this article both revealing, very shocking and at times extremely graphic. You will understand that in the end you have just barely scratched the surface. At that point you will already have spent at least several weeks or months. Not only because of the amount of information available but also because nobody is able to digest this kind of information on a constant basis.

You need time to swallow it and to let it sink in. Just so you know...

Which way to go is all up to you. So here we go...

Some day in June 2006 an old friend of mine came over from across the Atlantic to my place in Holland. A reunion long overdue. We had not seen each other for several decades and since our teenage years we really had not had any contact but surprisingly enough it seemed like we just as easily reconnected as if we had not seen one another only for a couple of weeks. It turned out he was working in the construction industry and so am I. Having similar roots and nearly the same age, having chosen the same industry by heart and thinking along the same lines we discovered we still have very much in common. We had long conversations about families, work and a plethora of other topics of mutual interest. As was to be expected we found our opinion on most subjects showed little if any difference. Just one small remark he made however turned out to change my life from that particular point in time on. It was a small sentence, just five words, that was powerful enough to have me change course radically. To turn my world upside down.

I have always found it very hard to admit that if someone told me something that did not fit within my personal 'construct of reality' or my 'window of viabilities' my vision might be wrong and that there is a practical or technical possibility it might somehow be true. This is not a truly academic reaction of mine as scientists should always consider any possibility (until proven otherwise) but hey, as a matter of fact I am not a real scientist and I was always convinced that my level of knowledge was strong enough a foundation for my opinion. It was based upon reading papers, listening and watching news and opinions and looking for popular scientific magazines, articles and just voluntary study. Being a very curious person I was known for the diversity of things I did know. So I immediately rejected my friend's suggestion. Apparently he was expecting my reaction so he calmly reiterated his suggestion and replied: 'Just look for yourself and you will find out'. Thus gently urging me to correct my stubborn unscientific behaviour.

But here is the strangeness of the situation. It was like someone stepped into the home I lived in for many years and told me to fold over the rug in the living, open a hatch I never noticed and look what would be underneath; a whole new and completely unexpected different world. Wouldn't you question the reasoning behind all this or the person who made this suggestion in the first place? So I thought my initial reaction wasn't really that weird.

But the suggestion kept nagging in the back of my mind and after some time I swallowed my pride (long time after he left of course) and started digging in the direction he pointed me out. Essentially his remark had to do with money and who owns what in our world:

Boy, some heavy revelations! And how true my friend's suggestion appeared to be...

So if my perspective of reality seemed skewed in respect to money of how much value and relevance would all the others subjects I had learned over time be? How would it affect me personally?

For a start I tried health:

Wait a minute. Is this last neurologist talking about spraying something? Is there something going on in the air that we should be aware of?:

- 15 watch this video,
- 16 watch this video,
- 17 watch this video,

If this seems to be going on in our skies how bad is the situation of our climate then?:

So if apparently opposing ideas exist about the warming of our globe's atmosphere and the effects of natural gasses shouldn't we be worrying about the way we create energy?:

- 26 watch these videos,

- 30 watch this video

Hmmmm. Really makes you wonder why there are hardly any big scale ongoing discussions on these topics. Just one narrative: Energy is scarce. Period. The bigger question behind all this is whether or not there is a hidden world that is invisible to us because we are being distracted with loads of other information. The next question that comes to mind is why there seems to be nobody who is warning us to look another way. Or is there?

Anything more we may need to know?

Well now you have had over 40 links to websites, videos and podcasts of people who seem to have knowledge we do not have. Or knowledge that contradicts what we have learned in education and from books and the daily news. Is someone lying? Is the truth somewhere in the middle? Is it disinformation? Who knows? It is up to every person to decide for themselves. Do not believe, rather do your own research.

But in light of what you have read or seen do you think a cashless society would be a good idea? Having a chip injected in your hand as your only means to pay and identify yourself? Eating manufactured food? Having your children mandatorily injected with fluids you do not know all the contents of?

Just let it all happen? No problem right? You may want to think twice...

Then finally when you think you have an idea what a layered reality looks like you may feel like the black dog.... surrounded by beings who do not know what you know. Unless they are being informed too of course....

Btw: my friend told me: 'The FED is privately owned'.
